

ABSTRACT

Acquired data about inter-organizational communication interactions is used to form constructs indicative of a hierarchical structure for an organization. An exemplary graphical layout is shown which may be derived from the addressing data associated with the interactions to depict a communication network construct of the organization over time. Placement of individuals in the graphical construct may be used to infer each individual's placement in an organizational hierarchy construct.